A giving spirit and generous heart is one of the greatest gifts a parent can pass on to a child. It is those gifts that twins Timolin (left) and Casey Cole cherish the most about their father, legendary musician Nat King Cole. To keep that spirit alive, and perhaps to light the same spark in children, the sisters have founded Nat King Cole Generation Hope, which will provide musical instruments, seminars, recording equipment, mentoring programs and even sheet music to students in South Florida. The twins, who both live in Boca Raton with their families, work with local school districts to enhance their music programs. Timolin says they hope to enrich the lives of school children through music education, as well as keep their father's legacy alive through special programs that include lectures by artists who have been influenced by Cole's groundbreaking career.
