Miami Heat vs. Toronto Raptors Game to Benefit
Nat King Cole Generation Hope

Blocked tickets for November 13 Game

BOCA RATON, FL, October 14, 2010 – Supporters of Nat King Cole Generation Hope (www.natkingcolefoundation.org) will help raise funds for music education in local schools while enjoying the highly anticipated Miami Heat vs. Toronto Raptors game on Saturday, November 13. The Foundation has blocked a center court (level 300) section with 100 seats, with a portion of ticket sales benefitting the organization. In addition, a school supported by the Foundation will perform at the game.

Nat King Cole Generation Hope was founded by the youngest twin daughters of Nat King Cole, Timolin and Casey Cole, in 2008, after learning of budget cuts in South Florida schools. Proceeds will help further music education in South Florida schools, reaching kids with the greatest need and fewest resources.

“This is a wonderful opportunity for families to come out and cheer on the Heat while supporting music education,” said Timolin Cole, president of Nat King Cole Generation Hope. “We will sit together as a group and enjoy a wonderful evening of basketball and music.”

Tickets are $100 and can be purchased at www.natkingcolefoundation.org. Seats are center court, section 300, with the 100 tickets seated together. Once purchased, tickets can be picked up at the Nat King Cole Generation Hope table within the American Airlines arena the evening of the game.
